NCTE tightens noose around teacher education colleges

To lose accreditation if found at fault

OUR STAFF REPORTER
BHOPAL

Department of Higher education is all set to check manipulations made by colleges running various teacher education courses. These colleges will lose permission to operate if found at fault.

According to the new norms National Council for Teacher Education (NCTE) has made it mandatory for the colleges to submit details of land on which the college building is constructed, number of teachers and students and other details every year.

NCTE has termed this norm as Annual Appraisal Report (AAR) that has been made mandatory for all recognised colleges.

Officials of higher education and NCTE will be authorised to verify the details given in appraisal report physically in surprise inspections.

At present there more than 630 colleges in the state are recognised by NCTE, a regulatory body for teacher training programme.

Out of these, about 100 colleges have not been given permission for admissions this year owing to complaints. Department of higher education has given admissions to students through counselling in 516 colleges across the state.

The colleges are required to submit a balance sheet of attendance of teachers and students.

NCTE has also made registration of teachers mandatory with the governing body. All teachers of an institute will have to register themselves after which they will get a unique number ID.

Profile of the teacher will get updated by the NCTE on annual basis. Teachers need to verify their documents through their respective university or the state education board.

This step was taken after reports of teachers being engaged in more than one institute. Several institutes were found guilty of showing teachers name on record even after their resignation for years.

College management will have to submit land related documents to the NCTE along with an affidavit of self declaration. Registry documents of land, land use certificate, mutation certificate, various permissions required for buildings etc should be submitted with the NCTE.

Warning to principals to take Cambridge English prog seriously

Principals told to submit weekly report regularly to monitoring cell

OUR STAFF REPORTER

Department of higher education has warned the principals of colleges to take Cambridge English programme on top priority. Written instructions were issued on Monday after receiving complaints against the principals in large numbers.

The Cambridge English classes have been kept on top priority. This could be judged by the fact that periods for these classes have been fixed at prime time and remedial classes have been arranged for students if they miss class of any other subject.

Principals have been instructed to keep the trainers engaged in English training programme free from responsibilities of other committees so that they pay proper attention to Cambridge English programme. Principals have also been told that classes taken by the trainers for Cambridge should be counted in their number of periods.

It needs to be mentioned that the trainers selected for imparting Cambridge English training were given several other responsibilities by the college principals despite oral instructions from officials in the directorate. Moreover, most of the principals were not taking this programme seriously. Ultimately, additional commissioner Ved Prakash had to issue written instructions warning them to pay proper attention to this ambitious programme.

Principals have been asked to submit weekly report regularly to the monitoring cell. Signature of principal has been made mandatory on the weekly report.

Some principals had earlier denied providing basic infrastructure for the course. According to the new order, principals will be held accountable for providing infrastructure like projector screen, printer, scanner, internet enabled computers, whiteboard etc for Cambridge classes.

Most of the principals had allotted slack timings for Cambridge classes, now additional commissioner has instructed to fix periods when maximum number of students remain present on the campus.

drew poor response from the doctors. Only two doctors had given consent to hold OPD in the evening and the number couldn't increase even after several efforts were made by the college.

"For starting evening OPDs, we require at least 10 doctors. We have postponed the plan on not getting the required number," college dean Dr Jyoti Bindal told media-persons. She said she will review the plan and ask doctors about their problems and reason why they are not interested in paid OPDs. The plan of evening OPD was proposed by the then addition chief secretary Radheshyam Juliana in 2018 who suggested that doctors of MY Hospital and other associated hospitals will work in paid OPD in the hospital. As doctors did not agree to stop private practice, the college decided to start OPDs with the doctors who are drawing non-practicing allowance (NPA). But then too, few doctors agreed.

If the facility starts, patients will get early treatment and facilities similar to private hospitals.

ASSISTANT PROFESSORS' EXAMINATION

Cut offs of all subjects changed

OUR STAFF REPORTER
Indore

Cut off marks of almost all subjects of assistant professor exam-2017 have changed as Madhya Pradesh Public Service Commission (MPPSC) has implemented order of Madhya Pradesh High Court pertaining to women and physically handicapped quota.

The names of many candidates who were selected in the initial list figured in waiting list following revision of cut-off marks.

After a gap of 25 years, assistant professor examination for more than 3,100 posts was held last year and selection lists were released. However, petitions were filed in High Court over quota for physically handicapped people due to which selected candidates were not given joining letters by Department of Higher Education (DHE).

In June, the court had disposed of petitions giving directions to the MPPSC.

Complying with the directives, the MPPSC had first issued revised posts of assistant professors and later revised the selection list.

A closer look at the list revealed that almost all subjects in selection list were revised due to change in cut-off marks.

Though the revised selections list has been released, there seems to be no respite in sight for nearly 3100 candidates selected for assistant professor's posts lying vacant at government colleges across the state.

Despite being selected a year ago, the candidates are still waiting for joining.

Initially, the joining was put on hold following legal cases over reservation. And now, the appointments seem to have caught in political tangle.

A section of Congress workers including Pankaj Prajapati had lodged complaints with Department of Higher Education giving appointments a political colour. Prajapati alleged that MPPSC under pressure from BJP-led government in the state had scrapped the interviews and selected candidates on the basis of marks in exams.

With change in guard at the state, the appointments may delay further.
